DIARY NOTES

Executive Director - Comptroller

MSW

24 July 1965

1. Admiral Raborn called to ask us to obtain from General Fitch's office some statistics, such as how much it costs to train, maintain, and put a platoon or company of Marines into Vietnam. He said that it would be useful to have any other comparable figures, such as a tank company or other tactical unit, which can be used to compare the relative costs and benefits with some of our [redacted] (I asked John Clarke to do this.)

2. I spent some time with John Clarke and [redacted] reviewing the contingency plan which Charlie Schultze of the Bureau of the Budget asked us to develop. I called Charlie and asked him if he was thinking of eliminating us or both CIA and the Department of Defense from the supplemental. He said that he really didn't know, that the objective was to keep the supplemental as small as possible. It could be that the Department of Defense would go without us, it could be that there wouldn't be any supplemental, or it could be that there would be some for each of us. In any case, the objective is the same. I told him that we were having some difficulty and that it looked as though we would run out of money about January or February unless we get a supplemental now.
